Mara Abboud
1926 - 2004 Lebanese

Mara Abboud's art has received international recognition and critical acclaim both for her brilliant innovation and unusual technique. Her painting style is uniquely her own, interweaving a palette of spectacular colors with fantasy designs from a myriad of cultures, achieving a jewel-like-tapestry effect on her canvases reminiscent of mosaic tiles and stained glass. 1998 International Artist of the Year, International Women's Conference, 1980 Artist of the Year, Santa Barbara Arts Festival, 1977 International Artist of the Year, International Beaux Arts.

Her art has been exhibited in 20 enthusiastically received one-woman shows and has appeared in over 26 major publications that include Architectural Digest, Los Angeles Times, New York Times, Boston Globe, Santa Barbara Magazine, Art in America, Art News, Naples Illustrated and Gulfshore Magazine.

Cousin to poet/philosopher Kahlil Gibran and sister to international designer, Joseph Abboud, examples of her art are to be found in prestigious collections throughout the United States and Europe, including those of the former World Trade Center and Gulf & Western. Beverly Sills, Michele Lee, Mr. & Mrs. Brian Wilson, Mr. & Mrs. Ed McMahon, Mr. & Mrs. Don Murray, Mr. & Mrs. Fess Parker, Lord and Lady Ridley-Tree, Mrs. Harold Robbins, and Joseph Abboud are among her many distinguished private collectors.

David Azuz

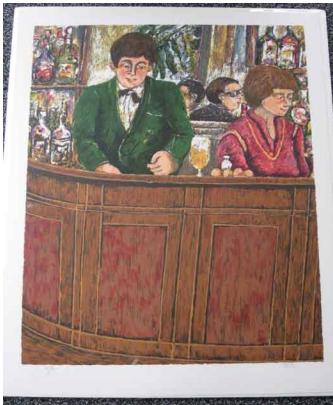

born 1942. Original artwork by Israel-born, France-based artist, David Azuz. David Azuz is a well-known FIGURATIVE painter, with a rich, colourful style, who has exhibited across Europe and Israel.

Israel-born, France-based artist, David Azuz is FIGURATIVE painter, with a rich, colourful style. His paintings are masterfully drawn and full of curiosity for the simple details of life. Azuz's subjects, in bistros and markets, whether in Rome, Paris or Tel Aviv, often express the solitude of the individual. These individuals are symbolic of the universal citizen and are deeply moving in their pathos and search for themselves. He usually works late at night in Paris cafes in search of those characteristic attitudes of the bartenders and patrons, which tend to blossom at this time of the evening, for instance, young couples in love, hiding their romance in the corner or old ladies getting a little warmth from the anisette they sip slowly to make time go a long way. In today's world, it is comforting to meet an artist who has not indulged in fashion by abstracting the patterns of life, but. ...on the contrary, has used his knowledge of classical drawing and, above all, his passionate temperament to communicate to us the simple gestures of life which most have forgotten to do.

Amelto Dalla Costa

1926 - 2004 Lebanese

Born in 1929 in Italy, Amleto dalla Costa still lives and works in the same city in which he has painted and studied since his childhood.

Throughout his career, he has experimented with many mediums and different art forms, from photography to art-directing and from visual design to pure graphic imagery. However, he is perhaps best known for his wonderful paintings and silkscreen (serigraph) prints.

His compositions are diverse and his subjects are usually women. They are always profoundly personal, as well as enigmatic, elusive and provocative. Dalla Costa, a true painter with the palette of northern Italy, paints a unique interpretation of the female form.

Restituto Embuscado

1967 - Embuscado founded "Dissectionalism, Communalism and Compartmentalism." In adhering to the spirit of life, Embuscado discarded the idea of mutilation process like dissecting the frog for aesthetic purpose, and instead, he exhibited the logic of "dissectional art" at "Dayrit Gallery" in Manila.

1969 - Embuscado, while an art student, participated at the Sao Paulo art exhibition in Sao Paulo, Brazil. Embuscado published his book entitled "The Aesthetic of Dissectionalism," a general theory and practice. In keeping with his objective, Embuscado asserted that "Art as a whole must describe not only the political condition of a particular event, but must highlight the necessity of continuous struggle in order to be remained compartmentally structured; naturally, without the modernist and the socialist realist rigid boundary; and, of course, its world-view must be culturally tied with a theory of racial unity."

1984-1985 - In conjunction with Embuscado's art exhibition at "Max Gallery" (now defunct) located at the East Village, he launched side by side, "Dissectional Art," and "Compartmental Art;" and later on, "Communal Art."

1985 - Embuscado's exhibition catalog entitled "Dissectionalism in The Nuclear Age," was listed in the "85-86 Annual Guide" Issue of "Art in America" p.308 "Out of the East Village," Will Grant wrote, ("Artspeak" 1985) "Embuscado, continues to proclaim his aesthetic Credo of Dissectionalism in new works at Max galley." In "Dissectionalism in The Nuclear Age," (exhibition catalog) Embuscado says: "Dissectionalism begins by bringing out a new form of life in art, a new world of freedom, a dissectional consciousness, a spatial relationship between art and logic."

1989 - Embuscado began documenting and exhibiting his work in "Smokey Mountain," a huge dumping ground in Tondo' Manila. In 1992, Embuscado, as an artist-theorist, taught the reality of "communal art" as part of a garbage-life to the community of "Smokey mountain" people; especially, to their children.

Mark King

born 1931, American,

Mark King describes his approach to painting as ninety percent preparation. "It takes a great deal of time for me... but once I begin, I work with great impetus, with immense bursts of energy. It is not until the last ten or fifteen minutes before completion that I am able to see where the painting is going and to catch the mood of the moment."

Born in Bombay, India to British parents in 1931, Mark King's childhood was one of exotic experience and privileged education. After graduating from La Martinière College in Calcutta, the sixteen-year-old King sailed to England to attend Bournemouth College of Art. There he studied painting, sculpture, architecture and theatre design. Subsequently, he spent seven years as the resident scenic designer at the Oxford Playhouse Theatre. In 1961, he decided to concentrate on painting, and he moved to Paris, where he studied at the École des Beaux-Arts and the Louvre. It was there that he developed his impressionistic style, influenced by the wealth of examples of European masters.

Change has played an important role in both King's art and life. "I have a need, artistically, for exposure to new ideas and images," he says, and it was this need that brought him to America in 1968, a move that prompted a shift in his working methods. A landscape painter in France, King began to expand his subject matter to include sports and, finding the camera an indispensable tool, to work from photographs. Since coming to America, Mark King's work has found a wide acceptance across the United States.

Michael Knigin

born 1942, American,

Knigin attended and graduated from Tyler School of Art, Temple University. During his junior year, he was awarded a Ford Foundation Grant to study fine art lithography at the renowned Tamarind Lithography Workshop, in Los Angeles. After graduating college in 1966, Knigin started teaching at the Pratt Graphic Center in Manhattan where he started a fine art lithography workshop. After a year and a half he opened his own publishing company, Chiron Press, and added a silkscreen printing facility. The shop remained in existence for over seven years, printing and publishing editions for the most renowned contemporary artists, including Andy Warhol, Roy Lichtenstein, and Paul Jenkins. In 1988 he was appointed to the NASA Art Team and was sent to the Kennedy Space Center to visually interpret the launch of the space shuttle Discovery, celebrating NASA's return to space after the Challenger's disaster in 1986. In 1991 he was recalled to interpret the touchdown of the space shuttle Atlantis at Edward's Air Force Base. Michael's work is included in over 60 museums and corporate collections, including the Whitney American Museum of Art, Albright-Knox, The Cooper Hewitt Museum, The Portland Museum of Art, The Israel Museum, The Port Authority of NY, Citibank, NASA, U.S. Dept. of State, and the Phillip Morris Collection. His work has been written about in approximately forty articles, featured in publications such as the New York Times, Art in America and Art News. Last but not least, he has been commissioned to create art by over forty corporations and institutions.

Phillipe Noyer

born 1917. ESTABLISHED French PAINTER and GRAPHIC ARTIST Phillippe Noyer's stylised images featuring the material luxury and ephemera surrounding early 20th century high society have an ART DECO feel. The luminosity in his works comes from a technique he discovered and perfected in which he avoids white in favor of pure colors. "My paintings are what they appear to be, nothing more, nothing less," Philippe Noyer Philippe Noyer was born June 28, 1917 in Lyon (central France). After a traditional course of study at the elite Ecole des Roches, Noyer enrolled in the Beaux Arts (Fine Arts) School of Lyon, before going to Paris to study at the Paul Colin School of Art and experience the whirlwinds of Surrealism first hand on Paris' Left Bank.

Philippe Noyer started his painting career in 1943. That same year he met the famous Paris art dealer, Emmanuel David, who promoted world-known "School of Paris" painters from 1943 - 1950. David immediately put Noyer on contract with the prestigious DROUANT-DAVID Gallery of Paris. Parallel to his paintings, which at the time, represented owls wrapped in leaves and round-faced urchins with their pet animals, Philippe Noyer soon became one of the most sought after portraitist of Paris and London high society. The Gallery gave him his first one-man show in 1947, which immediately crowned him with instant success. Life was good.

While he was with the DROUANT-DAVID Gallery, Philippe Noyer says his stroke of luck for his success in the United States can be attributed to Mr. Robert Goldstein, the former President of the 20th Century Fox movie company. It was in 1949. The Gallery gave twenty of Philippe Noyer's paintings on consignment to an American art dealer who had agreed to organize an exhibition of them in the United States. The American dealer, however, was a heavy gambler and one night, before the show, he suffered unprecedented losses and was forced to sell off the paintings without a profit. The buyer turned out to be Robert Goldstein who was so pleased with his purchase that he distributed the art to his friends, including the legendary Samuel Goldwyn, who, in turn, made Philippe Noyer's name known on the West Coast.

A deep and long lasting friendship between Noyer and Goldstein ensued. In 1960 when, like it happens to all artists, Philippe Noyer was in a difficult financial situation, Goldstein jettied Philippe from Paris to London and organized an auction at which all of Noyer's current paintings were sold to Goldstein's friends.

In those following years, Philippe was commissioned to paint the portraits of dozens of personalities including Elizabeth Taylor, Dinah Shore, Jean Wallace and the children of actor Alan Ladd and producer Alan Lerner. As his art matured, however, he put aside this career as a portraitist to devote himself entirely to the delicate, sophisticated, slim, long-limbed ladies who had progressively replaced children as his favorite subjects.

Roth

G.H. Rothe is renowned as master of the mezzotint and as one of the world's greatest living artists. She combines technical mastery with inspired imagination. She was born in 1935 in Beuthen, Germany (ceded to Poland in 1945) and her studies in art history, human anatomy, goldsmithing and extensive drawing culminated in her discovery of the mezzotint technique. Impelled to revive this most difficult technique of printmaking led to an invention in 1972 never accomplished before in mezzotint: transparency. Her years of research and constant practice supplied the perfect medium for her vast repertoire of images.

Elke Sommer

Elke Sommer (born 5 November 1940), born Elke Schletz, is a German-born actress, entertainer, and artist.

Sommer was born in Berlin to a Lutheran Minister and his wife. After the war, the family was evacuated to Erlangen, a small university town in the south of Germany, where, despite their lack of money, she attended the prestigious Gymnasium (high school) in Erlangen. However her father's death when she was 14 precluded further formal education, and she moved to England to be an au pair, to perfect her English and earn a living.

She was spotted by film director Vittorio De Sica whilst on holiday in Italy, and started appearing in films there in the late 1950s. She quickly became a noted sex symbol and moved to Hollywood in the early 1960s. She also became one of the most popular pin-up girls of the time, and posed for several pictorials in Playboy Magazine.

She became one of the top movie actresses of the 1960s and made 99 movie and television appearances between 1959 and 2005, including A Shot in the Dark (1964) with Peter Sellers as Inspector Clouseau, The Art of Love (1965) with James Garner and Dick Van Dyke, The Oscar (1966) with Stephen Boyd, Boy, Did I Get a Wrong Number! (1966) with Bob Hope, the Bulldog Drummond extravaganza Deadlier Than the Male (1966), and The Wrecking Crew (1969) with Dean Martin; Sommer was the leading lady in each of these films.

In 1964 she won the Golden Globe Awards as Most Promising Newcomer Actress for The Prize, a film she co-starred with Paul Newman and Edward G. Robinson.

In 1975, Peter Rogers cast her in Carry On Behind as the Russian Professor Vrooshka. She became the Carry On's highest paid performer, at £30,000 (a honour shared with Phil Silvers for Follow That Camel).

Sommer also performed successfully as a singer, making several LP records.

Since the 1990s, she has concentrated more on painting than on acting. As an actress, she worked in half a dozen countries learning the languages (she speaks seven different languages) and storing up images which she would later express on canvas. Her artwork shows a strong influence from Marc Chagall. Sommer had a long-running feud with Zsa Zsa Gabor that culminated in a libel suit.

She now lives in Los Angeles, California
