Pandemic loneliness at Christmas (A few thoughts from a Christian Post article, 2 April 2020)

“In a time like this, we have a choice about how we will respond to loneliness. It seems like a bad response to inundate yourself with screens, whether that is through shows, movies, video games, unending news updates, or social media. These things are not negative in and of themselves, but... staring at a screen for hours will not solve much.

“Another bad response to loneliness is to underestimate its dangers. Many temptations come in full force as a result of loneliness. As a counselor I have seen this. When we're lonely, we want to be comforted. Many things that promise comfort but never deliver it will call us when we're lonely.

“So what are good uses of loneliness? First, in whatever way possible, reach out to others (even for small things). If you are feeling lonely, you are not the only one. We often believe that others do not want to be bothered or are too busy, but if you are feeling lonely, chances are good that someone you know is feeling that way. And you can always reach out to them through phone, video, or a message of some kind. And when you connect with someone, do not connect with them by complaining. Try rather to connect with someone over positive things.

Second, for those that find themselves lonely because of having more free time, consider doing what you always have said you would do if you had more time. Have you wanted to write more, read more, eat healthier, redecorate your home, learn to play an instrument, or learn to cook? Take concrete, practical steps forward to structure your time and put those plans into action. Additionally, for those with more free time than usual, truly make an effort to practice the great spiritual discipline of rest. Far better than constant productivity is the peace that comes from being rested, and a slower pace of life can teach us to connect with God in ways that we previously had not.

Lastly, practice thinking differently about the experience of being alone. Much of desperation we feel in times of loneliness begins in our thoughts. To be isolated is not good, but there is indeed a great benefit in solitude rightly used. Can you be alone with yourself? Not because you don't want to be around others, but because you are able to be at peace with who you are when there are not constant noise and distractions? If not, now would be an excellent time to do the work of answering those questions.

The Gospel of Jesus Christ is good news for the lonely. And that isn't a cliché answer. Jesus understands what it is to feel lonely, wants to meet you in your loneliness, and shape you through it. Jesus is a friend to the lonely, and always available for you to call on Him. Psalm 68:6 tells us that “God sets the lonely in families”. His heart is not that you would have countless superficial connections, but that you would feel a sense of belonging. This is a great benefit of the church as the community of believers.

In these unprecedented times, be sure to stop, be mindful, and recognize the moment and how you may look back on it when it is over. How might you connect with God in this time? How might you foster positivity and set your mind on the right things? How might you connect with others in this time, despite the barriers? Responding well to loneliness entails a perspective that is not just in agony waiting for it to be over, but it entails a maturity that prepares for what might be cultivated during this time and how you can emerge from it when it ends. Plan for how you plan to do live differently after this season. How might you intentionally work against what contributes to loneliness?

During this time, many of us yearn for when things will go “back to normal”. Let loneliness teach you how important community is so that when this is over, things don't go “back to normal”. As research has shown, what is “normal” is a sense of rampant loneliness and isolation. Perhaps God is calling us not to go back to the way things were, but to learn to connect with others in ways that we never have before.
