Scripture to Ponder

Romans 3:20

For no one can ever be made right with God by doing what the law commands. The law simply shows us how sinful we are.

Due to Covid precautions, morning greeters are temporarily suspended. Please pick up a bulletin by the front door. Take an extra and share with a friend!

Nursery Provided!

Children under 3 are invited to visit the nursery during the morning worship time. Teresa Lemley and daughter Lacey Lemley provide nursery care for little ones each Sunday morning. Parents, you will receive a pager that will alert you if you are needed. Isn't it wonderful how God is providing for our little ones!

Sisterhood Celebration

This Tuesday, Sept. 14th
6:00pm at Beulah

Our One Another Women's Ministry meeting this month will be a celebration of Sisterhood in the Lord! All women are invited to join us for a pot luck fellowship meal. Bring your favorite finger food and we will break bread together!

Patti Bradley is the leader of the women's ministry group and looks forward to hearing ideas for serving in the coming year. Following our meeting, we will be putting together "Encouragement Bags" that will be distributed to the staff in St. Mary's ER. Our healthcare workers need our prayers and encouragement more than ever right now.

Grandpa Jacques: A True Story

Written by his granddaughter Hilary Ribons, 2018

My grandpa Jacques wore heavy cologne, had a thick European accent and a deep, booming voice. He had a strange tattoo on his arm. It was drawn with thick lines. A rose. I later discovered that it covered something more sinister. A series of numbers. You see, Grandpa was a Holocaust survivor, and without his determination and fierce will to live, I wouldn't be here. Sometimes, when life gets hard, I think of Grandpa. His strength and resilience continue to inspire me every day.

At age 14, Grandpa was sent to the Blechhammer death camp along with his grandmother, mother, and younger brother and sister. Grandpa and his brother, Bernard, were the only two to make it past the entry gates alive. He later survived a 200-mile death march through Eastern Europe in January, wearing nothing but pajamas and without proper shoes. After he was liberated, the first thing he did when he was strong enough to leave the camp was to travel to the neighboring town and have his photo taken—to show that he was a person, and a survivor. There's a photo of him from that day—gaunt, but smiling, still wearing the Nazi-issued striped death camp pajamas and beret—that he brought with him when he immigrated to the U.S.

Grandpa eventually settled in California, where he married and raised five children. I grew up in Los Angeles in a home that showed signs of Grandpa's new beginnings. Framed in our kitchen were the menus that Grandpa and Uncle Bernard saved from the ship they took to the U.S. Grandpa's success story was the backdrop of our childhood. But he never discussed the horrors he went through in the camps. Not with his kids, and definitely not with us grandkids, though it was clear that the trauma followed him his whole life.

As I researched the story, I couldn't help but think about my Grandpa Jacques. Was he truly at peace? I typed in "Jacques Ribons photo" into the search bar. A bunch of results came up. One of them was a link to a story on Huffington Post, a spotlight of an artist's work—painted portraits of survivors.

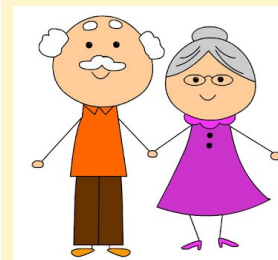

The artist herself, who goes by the name Lydia Emily, was a survivor of violent assaults, debilitating disease, and countless hardships. She'd found solace in painting portraits that showcased the strength of the human spirit. I scrolled through her beautiful paintings until two side-by-side portraits stopped me in my tracks. There, on the web page, were two paintings of Grandpa: One, of him smiling boldly as a boy wearing a death camp uniform, and one of him in his eighties.

Tears filled my eyes as I realized that Grandpa Jacques is more than just an inspiration to me. His spirit lives on to remind others that thriving after unspeakable tragedy is possible. I looked closer at the second painting. Grandpa looked just the way I remember him last. Smiling, his wispy white hair ringing his head like a halo, his piercing blue eyes fixed on the viewer. Happy. Resilient. Peaceful. In that moment, I knew Grandpa had led me to that portrait. To show me that he is, indeed, at peace.

The Story Behind Grandparents Day

In 1969, a nine-year-old boy named Russell Capper sent President Nixon a letter asking him to dedicate a day to grandparents, much like the national celebrations of Mother's Day and Father's Day.

President Nixon's secretary replied to Russell, saying the president liked the idea but couldn't declare a holiday without a resolution from Congress.

Eight years later, Jennings Randolph, a West Virginia Senator, recruited members of the Senate to make Russell's idea a reality. They introduced a joint resolution to the Senate and on August 3, 1978, President Jimmy Carter signed the proclamation that would make Grandparents Day a national observance each fall.
