The Bride Awaits

By Michael Orr

The bride awaits, a gorgeous sight,
She waits for Him all through the night.
Her garments ready, her lamp is trimmed,
Not once has her excitement dimmed.

For as she waits in bright array,
She longs for Him until that day.
To see Him in His splendor dressed,
She knows that she must look her best.

The bride awaits, no stain of sin,
Held separate from the world of men.
For she is clean and sealed by grace,
Protected by His strong embrace.

For her beloved paid the price,
A lesser gift would not suffice.
He gave Himself to win her hand,
And satisfy the law's demand.

The bride awaits the lion's roar,
When sin and death will be no more.
And there descends the groom's procession,
To claim His bride, his prized possession.

A voice says come, the time is here,
To claim His bride and dry each tear.
For the sorrow of this world has passed,
When the bride awaits no more at last
