My Portion

By Michael Orr

My portion, neither here nor there,
In places fractured, full, or fair.
Nor is it where the wounded stab,
Where hands may push or pull or jab.

For what I claim cannot be taken,
Nor diminished, dulled or shaken.
Stronger than the hardest blow,
Deeper than the deep may go.

My portion holds when pressed without,
To calm the waves of fear and doubt,
While wrapping arms to hold inside,
The place where deeper things abide.

No force on Earth could move a stone,
Or leave me feeling all alone.
Instead I move on ground anointed,
Firm and fitted, soul appointed.

My portion stands in stronger stance,
Than lucky stars or random change,
But holds a vigil strong and still,
Held within Almighty will.

No gambles for a higher pay,
No fading light on glory' day.
But all unfolding, moving fast,
Until my portion comes at last.
