Self, I Said
By Michael Orr

Self, I said, you've come so far,
From starting line to Northern Star,
Though darkness creeps along the trail,
From silent cry to bitter wail.

This dark cannot erase the flame,
That holds the spark and calls my name,
To storm the walls of frost and fear,
And wipe away each bitter tear.

Self, I said, your faith is stronger,
Deeper as the day grows longer,
None can turn this stone to dust,
Though wounds may come and come they must.

No one has the strength to halt me,
Terrorize or even fault me,
Held within the potter's hand,
Nothing wasted, here I stand.

Self, I said, I'm wide awake,
Though bending still I will not break,
My eyes alight with day unfolding,
One step forward, always holding.

Though I crawl or hobble through,
I'll always move an inch or two,
Until my maker I will meet,
Where self and I will be complete.
