Our secretary asked for an update of little Pablo Araya. So, I decided to copy and paste what I sent her.

Bro. Danny sent me an update message this morning. They admitted Pablo on Monday and are now preparing him for his chemo treatments, starting either tomorrow or the next day. The good news is that both Danny and Cindy can be with him during the month that he is in the hospital. Before, they had said that visitation would be restricted. So, they will be taking turns being with him, since only one person at a time can be in the same room. The cleansing requirements are very strict. Each time Danny or Cindy leaves the room and returns, they must sterilize everything, change and sterilize clothing, cell phones, Danny's insulin pump, etc. They will be literally living there at the hospital for one month. Sophia has another room close by, so when one is not with Pablo, he or she is with Sophia. He didn't go into any details about Sophia currently. I imagine that she'll be under strict surveillance and protection before the transplant takes place so as not to be exposed to sickness or contamination.

Danny is asking for our continued prayers. The financial burden will be demanding as well. Maybe God will direct some faithful brethren to help a little.
