Living Between What God Has Promised and What He is Doing

Most of us live in the middle space between what God has promised and what we can clearly see Him doing right now. That in-between place can feel uncomfortable. We know what God has said, but our circumstances haven't caught up yet. Faith often grows best in that tension.

Scripture is full of God's people living in this very space. Abraham had a promise of a great nation long before he held Isaac in his arms (Genesis 12:1-3; 21:1-3). Israel was promised a land flowing with milk and honey, yet they wandered for years in the wilderness (Exodus 3:8; Deuteronomy 8:2). David was anointed king, but he spent years running for his life before the crown ever rested on his head (1 Samuel 16; 2 Samuel 5).

In those waiting seasons, God was not absent. He was shaping hearts, building trust, and preparing His people for what was coming next. The delay was not denial, it was development.

We experience this same reality today. God has promised forgiveness, new life, and an eternal home (Ephesians 1:7; John 10:10; John 14:1-3). Yet we still struggle with weakness, uncertainty, and a broken world. Living between promise and fulfillment requires daily faith, choosing to trust God's word even when the results are not yet visible.

Paul reminds us, "For we walk by faith, not by sight" (2 Corinthians 5:7). Faith does not ignore reality, it anchors reality to God's character. Waiting seasons teach us patience, humility, and dependence. They remind us that God's timing is purposeful and His work is often deeper than what we can immediately see.

If you find yourself in that in-between place today, take heart. God is still working. He is faithful to complete what He has begun (Philippians 1:6). Our calling is not to rush the promise, but to remain faithful in the waiting. To be praying, obeying, and trusting that the God who promised is also the God who provides.

Between promise and fulfillment, God is doing more than we realize. And in that space, He is forming us to become the people He has called us to be.
