The Grounding

By Michael Orr

It's not in the spotlight where everything shines,
It's not where the colors bleed over the lines.
It's not in your chest when your heartbeat is pounding,
But in still, solid moments that dwell in the grounding.

For there in the grounding of heart and of mind,
Where calm and assurance are gently entwined,
The words and the wisdom were there from the founding,
That guides you to steadiness felt in the grounding.

And if by mere circumstance breaking your stride,
You rush to a place where your spirit can hide,
The doorway is open to presence abounding,
In the steadfast and steady resolve of the grounding.

Take comfort in promises, trials, and truth,
And everything good that you learned from your youth,
For the sturdiest notes in the music are sounding,
A strong, steady rhythm replayed in the grounding.

In deep, hidden places the echoes still fall,
Of the strong ones before you who answered the call,
"Take heart, weary soul in these trials surrounding,"
They're urging you on in the shape of the grounding.
