At the Cross

I wait, and time ticks past.
I gaze, made silent by the sight.
I watch, as soldiers meticulously move
Executing each terrible, torturous task.
I gasp, still life lingers in His fragile, broken form.
I flinch, as blow by blow,
Nails bite deep through flesh to find wood.
I stand as He is lifted high,
Silhouetted 'gainst the sky which He has made.
I weep as His cry echoes deep
In my hardened, calloused heart.
I wail, as He screams 'it is complete,
Finished, final, said and done.'
I fall, as the sky turns inky black
And the sun and moon and stars forget to shine.
I kneel, as worlds collide,
And time ticks by;
What once bound, no longer seems to hold.
I bow, for part of me is gone,
Kept forever on Calvary's painful peak.
I wait, at the foot of the cross,
To begin my journey home.
