A continued Happy Easter to you. Aside from it being Low Sunday, this is the week when we hear the story of “Doubting Thomas”. Most preachers are sympathetic to him. The incident does reveal that the “Golden Age” of the church is not “a thing”, as the kids would say. I find this comforting. At least in this world, people will always act like people. Even the disciples misunderstand Jesus after the resurrection. I am happy to stand with them, though. They are my people as much as you are. They are followers of Jesus who are trying their best to get things right, messing up, and trying again. I like the term “practicing Christian”. The Christian life does not live in the land of the theoretical. It is a practical faith, that calls for regular habits like loving neighbor, showing gratitude to God, praying, and going to church. We all try to get a little better at it over time but be gentle to yourself. I can practice throwing a football in my backyard every day. I am never going to become Tom Brady. God loves you just the way you are, and God wants you to continue to challenge yourself to keep practicing.

Blessings, Marc
