"Music...a vital part of a balanced spiritual diet"

Can you imagine a world without music? Surely NOT! J.S. Bach said: "I play the notes as they are written, but it is God who makes the music."

I am sure that all of us have a favourite song. Chances are that each one of us can identify a song that marks an occasion in our lives.

Music is a gift from God. In the bible, music is essential. Using music, people expressed praise and worship, as well as grief and lament. In fact, King Saul sent for young David who played for him, and the spirits fled and Saul's heart was lifted. In Psalm 40, the Psalmist cries out to God from the pit and expresses the joy of being heard, lifted out, and re-established by God.

Music is splashed all over the Psalms. Most have been set to music. The psalms express worship through joy, pain, suffering, exultation, praise, contemplation, prayer and meditation. Over the years, many people of faith have taken time to set the sacred psalms to music. We are the beneficiaries of the faithful work of these people.

As we reflect on the Psalms, each provides the people of God words to respond to what God is doing. This is very helpful when we are searching for a way of expressing ourselves to the Lord. When we become aware of God and what He has done and what He is doing in us, we are changed. This knew knowledge brings us to sing His praise.

When you sing, do you think about the words you are singing or are you just enjoying the beat and rhythm? Have you ever sung when you were praying? There is something special in singing to the Lord. Music seems to touch the human heart and soul very deeply. God inhabits the praise of His people.

So, I encourage you to sing! Sing to the Lord. When you sing to Him, think about what you are saying. If you believe that you have nothing to sing about, sing anyway! God will meet you and, if necessary, He will change your tune and give you a new song to sing to Him!

In the joy of the Lord,
Rob+

God's Grace at Work: Three Stories of Faith and Transformation

A Five-Year-Old With No One Left Five-year-old Bao is from the Bru tribe. His parents had left. His elderly grandfather was raising him alone, and the little boy could barely eat. He was too weak for school, too sick to play, and carrying a final-stage blood cancer diagnosis that had already seemed to decide his outcome. Local believers prayed. A week later, Bao was eating again, gaining strength, full of energy. Subsequent examinations confirmed what the community had already seen with their own eyes: no cancer detected. What happened next was just as significant. Doors opened for Gospel conversations throughout the entire community because people watched a little boy come back to life. Sometimes God touches one person, and a whole village starts paying attention.

Week After Week After Week Ministry workers met a family from a strong Buddhist background through a local food outreach. The mother, Lan, was seriously ill. The children had dropped out of school and were stuck in a cycle that was getting worse, not better. Workers kept coming back, week after week, with food, with presence, with the Gospel. Most people don't realize that real ministry rarely happens in one conversation. It builds over time, through consistent love that shows people the heart of Christ before they ever open a Bible. Over time, the family became open. Lan was healed. The children were freed from what had held them. Two of them now actively serve in their local church. What started with a bag of rice became the story of an entire family encountering God.

From New Believers to Church Planters Duc, from the Jarai people, and Huong, from a Kinh family, came to church under real pressure. Huong's family had strongly opposed her decision to follow Jesus. They came anyway, stayed anyway, and grew. Over three years they went through discipleship training, served faithfully, and let God do the slow work of maturity. Then they married, were commissioned, and went back to the Jarai region to plant churches among their own people. Today they lead Bible studies, disciple new believers, minister to children, and gather families in their home for worship. Resources are limited and challenges are constant, but they keep going. Watching people who were once new believers become church planters is one of the greatest joys of this work, and it is exactly what faithful discipleship is supposed to produce.

These testimonies remind us that God works powerfully through those who faithfully share the Gospel and persevere in His service. Whether through prayer, acts of love, or discipleship, God can use our consistent witness (☐ "You are the light of the world." — Matthew 5:14) to transform lives and bring entire communities closer to Christ.
