Dear Faithful Friends and Supporters,

As another term begins, I find myself more aware than ever that God is still at work—and that He still sees fit to include me in that work—I am grateful.

I remain in independent living here at my senior community, and my needs are well met. Housing, meals, medical care—I see each of these as coming directly from the Lord's hand, and I do not take them for granted.

Recently, a new neighbor moved in, and I have been watching for opportunities to extend a welcome and, Lord willing, something more. New arrivals often come carrying more than their belongings—there is frequently grief, or uncertainty, or a quiet longing for connection. I am praying that the Lord will open a real conversation and that I will be ready when He does.

That is also true of others here who are walking through the loss of a spouse. This community has no shortage of widows and widowers, and I know something about that kind of grief. I try to sit with them, not with easy answers, but with a listening ear and, when the moment is right, with the hope that has carried me through my own losses. The Lord is near to the brokenhearted, and I want to point people to Him.

Thank you for your faithful prayers and your generous giving. You make this ministry possible, and I think of you with deep gratitude.

Still serving,

Mrs. Dorothy Halsey
