

DBS Facilitation Guidelines

- Facilitate, Don't Teach: Avoid giving long explanations, theological lectures, or direct answers. Let the Holy Spirit and the text be the primary teachers.
- Stay in the Passage: Keep all discussion strictly anchored to the text being read. Do not wander off into outside information, theological debates, or unrelated Bible verses.
- Redirect with Questions: If a participant brings up an outside opinion or a confusing tangent, gently ask: "Where do you see that in this passage?" or "How does that connect to our text today?"
- Encourage Brief Responses: Ask participants to share in short sentences rather than long paragraphs so everyone has space to join.
- Embrace Silence: Allow quiet time after asking a question so people can think and engage with the text without feeling rushed.

DBS Facilitation Guidelines

- Facilitate, Don't Teach: Avoid giving long explanations, theological lectures, or direct answers. Let the Holy Spirit and the text be the primary teachers.
- Stay in the Passage: Keep all discussion strictly anchored to the text being read. Do not wander off into outside information, theological debates, or unrelated Bible verses.
- Redirect with Questions: If a participant brings up an outside opinion or a confusing tangent, gently ask: "Where do you see that in this passage?" or "How does that connect to our text today?"
- Encourage Brief Responses: Ask participants to share in short sentences rather than long paragraphs so everyone has space to join.
- Embrace Silence: Allow quiet time after asking a question so people can think and engage with the text without feeling rushed.

DBS Facilitation Guidelines

- Facilitate, Don't Teach: Avoid giving long explanations, theological lectures, or direct answers. Let the Holy Spirit and the text be the primary teachers.
- Stay in the Passage: Keep all discussion strictly anchored to the text being read. Do not wander off into outside information, theological debates, or unrelated Bible verses.
- Redirect with Questions: If a participant brings up an outside opinion or a confusing tangent, gently ask: "Where do you see that in this passage?" or "How does that connect to our text today?"
- Encourage Brief Responses: Ask participants to share in short sentences rather than long paragraphs so everyone has space to join.
- Embrace Silence: Allow quiet time after asking a question so people can think and engage with the text without feeling rushed.

DBS Facilitation Guidelines

- Facilitate, Don't Teach: Avoid giving long explanations, theological lectures, or direct answers. Let the Holy Spirit and the text be the primary teachers.
- Stay in the Passage: Keep all discussion strictly anchored to the text being read. Do not wander off into outside information, theological debates, or unrelated Bible verses.
- Redirect with Questions: If a participant brings up an outside opinion or a confusing tangent, gently ask: "Where do you see that in this passage?" or "How does that connect to our text today?"
- Encourage Brief Responses: Ask participants to share in short sentences rather than long paragraphs so everyone has space to join.
- Embrace Silence: Allow quiet time after asking a question so people can think and engage with the text without feeling rushed.

DBS Facilitation Guidelines

- Facilitate, Don't Teach: Avoid giving long explanations, theological lectures, or direct answers. Let the Holy Spirit and the text be the primary teachers.
- Stay in the Passage: Keep all discussion strictly anchored to the text being read. Do not wander off into outside information, theological debates, or unrelated Bible verses.
- Redirect with Questions: If a participant brings up an outside opinion or a confusing tangent, gently ask: "Where do you see that in this passage?" or "How does that connect to our text today?"
- Encourage Brief Responses: Ask participants to share in short sentences rather than long paragraphs so everyone has space to join.
- Embrace Silence: Allow quiet time after asking a question so people can think and engage with the text without feeling rushed.

DBS Facilitation Guidelines

- Facilitate, Don't Teach: Avoid giving long explanations, theological lectures, or direct answers. Let the Holy Spirit and the text be the primary teachers.
- Stay in the Passage: Keep all discussion strictly anchored to the text being read. Do not wander off into outside information, theological debates, or unrelated Bible verses.
- Redirect with Questions: If a participant brings up an outside opinion or a confusing tangent, gently ask: "Where do you see that in this passage?" or "How does that connect to our text today?"
- Encourage Brief Responses: Ask participants to share in short sentences rather than long paragraphs so everyone has space to join.
- Embrace Silence: Allow quiet time after asking a question so people can think and engage with the text without feeling rushed.