Days Ahead

By Michael Orr

I do not dread the days ahead,
Though pain sits at the table,
For seats arranged are often changed,
Whenever they are able.

A softer seat may often greet,
My weariness I carry,
But hard and straight may be my fate,
When comfort makes me tarry.

The seats all hold a story told,
That only they can measure,
A seat of peace or good increase,
To think upon and treasure.

One seat to mourn when life is torn,
One seat to hold redemption,
No seat is spared when life is shared,
Or forced into exemption.

But always seen and in between,
The places I am seated,
The table stands on soft demands,
Where fears have been defeated.

A place to eat for every seat,
Regardless of commotion,
To stop and feed my every need,
For every strong emotion.

For by His name there is no shame,
To sit and still be fed,
As every day I find my way,
To better days ahead.
