QUESTIONS

1. Where am I treating belonging to God's people as proof that God approves of my choices? How do Achan and Rahab challenge that assumption?
2. Are there things in my life that belong to God, but that I claim for myself? What would surrendering it require in practice?
3. When I believe my cause is righteous, do I assume that whatever I do to advance it is righteous too? When I ask God to support my plans, am I also willing to let him question and change them?
4. What does Rahab's response teach me about seeking God's mercy? How might her inclusion change the way our church welcomes people with an unfamiliar background or a difficult past?
