The Rain Will Remind Me

By Michael Orr

Though dryness surrounds us,
In days past before,
And my heartbeat is aching,
For what I call more,

The rain will remind me,
That blessing is present,
Though the world all around,
Is not always pleasant.

In the shadows of searching,
My soul often shrinks,
In this desert of longing,
Where my mind always thinks.

But the rain will remind me,
That thoughts are but sand,
And I'm better off praying,
In an unsteady land.

And I call myself wicked,
For the want in my prayers,
For I'd rather have no one,
Than someone who cares.

But the rain will remind me,
That pride is a lie,
For the love that pursues me,
Is greater than I.

In quiet surrender,
I wrestle in bed,
As the waters from Heaven,
Pour over my head.

For the rain will remind me,
That good things are grown,
When the rain whispers softly,
You are never alone.
